2023 Message

from the Chester County Agricultural Development Council

The Chester County Board of Commissioners and the Agricultural Development Council (Ag Council) are pleased to share the following stories about the people and places that make agriculture one of the county's top industries.

Journey along with us through these pages as we get to know our farming neighbors and all the delicious, locally grown products they produce. When you buy from these businesses, you are a part of the larger local food community that helps ensure Chester County farms continue to thrive now and in the future.

As Avon Grove Charter School teacher Krista Lauterwald (who is highlighted in this farm guide) likes to say, "If you are interested in food, you should be interested in farming!"

In this year's guide, we introduce you to Farmer of the Year Jamie Hicks and the Baily family, recipients of our annual service award. You'll meet farmer-entrepreneurs Emma and Aaron de Long of Red Dog Market who are growing a network of small-scale, sustainable farmers like themselves. You'll also learn why Lewis Barnard and his family felt it was their responsibility to preserve their historic orchard for future generations.

Lastly, you'll find out what it takes to safely share the road with agricultural vehicles and make our roads safer for everyone. It's all a part of living and working in a county known for its thriving agricultural industry, an industry that takes place everywhere from rural communities to bustling downtown centers.

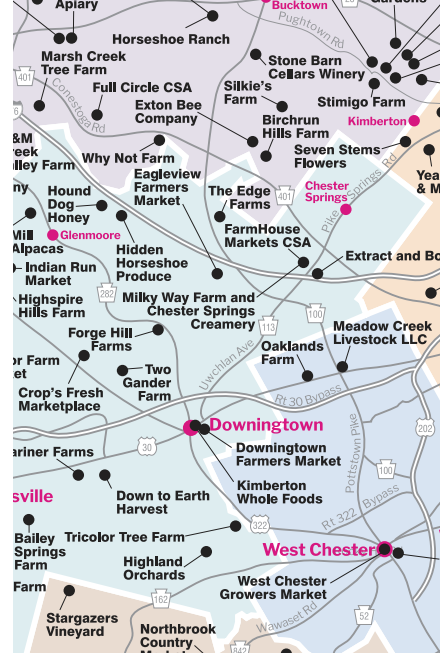

For more information about the Chester County Ag Council, please visit our website at www.chescofarming.org or find us on Facebook and Instagram.

Thank you for choosing Chester County fresh!

Red Dog Market: Farmers Supporting Farmers

This store with an unusual name has an unlikely business model. Red Dog Market, named for owners Emma and Aaron de Long's reddish colored dog, is an oasis of all things fresh and local with a special mission. Not only are the de Longs operating a friendly neighborhood market offering a variety of produce, meat, dairy products, and dry goods, but they are also helping to grow a network of local farmers like themselves.

AN UNEXPECTED OPPORTUNITY

Aaron and Emma de Long didn't set out to open a store, but the idea had been in the back of Emma's mind since she opened Kneehigh Farm on the nearby Lundale Farm property in 2015 and noticed the nearby building.

"I knew a store would allow me to extend my sales beyond the typical produce season, and it would give me a greater opportunity to share the foods I eat with my customers," recalls Emma.

After meeting her husband Aaron in 2016 through their mutual love of sustainable farming, the two were eager to expand their mission to "cultivate the healthiest, happiest humans" through food. When the building became available in the early part of the pandemic, they knew they had to act quickly.

"We never planned to open a store, but we felt that the universe was giving us this opportunity," says Aaron, who has since left his career at Pasa (a sustainable farming advocacy organization) to manage Red Dog Market full time.

Not only has the market been well-timed to dovetail with the growing interest in locally grown food fueled by pandemic food insecurity, but it's also provided a convenient spot for Emma's Kneehigh Farm CSA (community supported agriculture) customers to pick up their produce shares and do the rest of their shopping. Kneehigh Farm CSA members can use their points to purchase items in the store and receive a 10% discount on additional purchases.

A BUSINESS BASED ON FRIENDSHIP

When it came time to stock their shelves, Emma and Aaron first turned to their Lundale Farm neighbors who run Pasture Song Farm, a pastured meats and flower business, and then invited a cheesemaking friend who runs Valley Milkhouse in Oley to get on board. From there, they've expanded their sourcing network to include other farming families and friends resulting in a retail space celebrating all things local and fresh.

"The earth, air, and water of where you live becomes a part of who you are when you eat locally," says Aaron. "Customers can always ask us how things in the market are grown because I walk the fields and talk with the farmers we source from."

"We never planned to open a store, but we felt that the universe was giving us this opportunity"

As farmers themselves, they understand that every sale matters. They and their team go out of their way to welcome customers and talk with them about the products.

"We get to know our customers' families and they get to know us," says Aaron. "They trust us and our ability to source food from local, environmentally responsible farmers."

With interest in organic and sustainably sourced foods continuing to grow, Aaron and Emma feel optimistic about Red Dog Market's future and the need to support small, local farms.

"There is a social and economic value in what we do," says Aaron. "Local farming builds and strengthens our communities."

Sharing the Road with Your Farmer Neighbors

How many times have you been rushing to work and end up behind a slow-moving tractor or other piece of farm equipment? If you live, work, or commute through Chester County, it's probably happened to you. Agriculture is one of Chester County's top industries and economic drivers. It gives the county its sense of place and is an important part of its history. But a thriving agriculture industry requires year-round movement of people and products to make it all possible.

And it's not just about tractors. People need to move all kinds of vehicles including sprayers, combines, livestock trailers, hay, and milk trucks. You'll also likely see Amish buggies and horse drawn farm implements. PennDot has found that moving agricultural products is a significant portion of all trucking activity. If you like to eat, then those big trucks are on the road because of you.

Despite our reliance on agricultural vehicles and the people who drive them, Chester County farmers have been experiencing an unfortunate uptick in encounters with unsafe or distracted drivers, according to a 2023 Chester County Ag Council survey. What can you do to help?

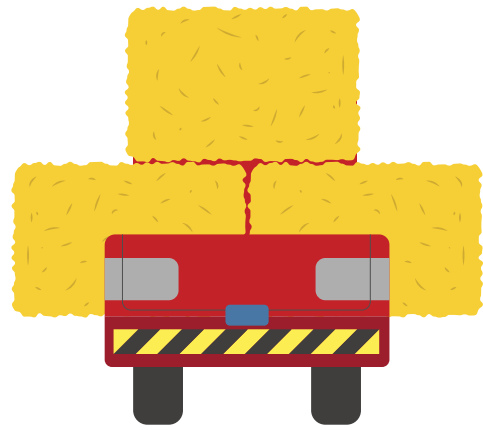

DON'T RUSH

If you are driving in Chester County, especially on rural roads, you are likely to encounter farm equipment, especially between April and November. Please allow plenty of time to reach your destination and know that if you are behind an agricultural vehicle, it will likely only add a couple minutes to your overall travel time.

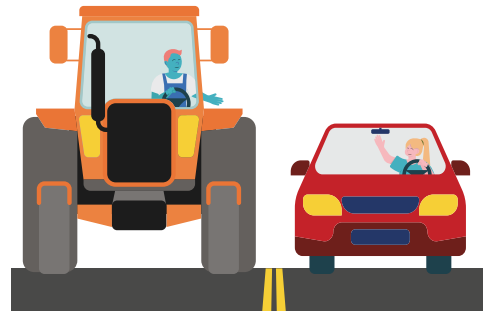

PASS WITH CARE

If the farmer has pulled off the road so that you may pass—or if the farmer does not pull over, but you feel you must pass—do so with caution. Never pass when curves or hills block your view of oncoming vehicles, you are in a 'No Passing Zone' or within 100 feet of any intersection, railroad grade crossing, bridge, elevated structure, or tunnel. Also, be careful that the farmer is not pulling to the right to make a wide left turn.

YIELD TO WIDE VEHICLES

Sometimes farm equipment is wider than travel lanes. If you approach wide equipment and cannot pass safely, stop. Please pull off the road, turn around, or back away so the equipment can pass you. Watch for pilot or escort cars, which help to indicate an oversize vehicle—if you see one, pull off so the vehicle can pass you.

REMAIN VISIBLE

Don't assume the farmer knows you are driving near his vehicle. While most farmers will check behind themselves whenever possible, they are often concentrating on keeping their equipment on the road and avoiding oncoming traffic and low-hanging branches. Before you pass, use your horn to let the driver know where you are. Note that farmers may not be able to hear you over their equipment noise.

Remember, farmers and truck drivers are people too, with jobs and families just like yours. They deserve to get home safely at the end of the day and so do you.

Thanks to Pennsylvania Farm Bureau for these road safety tips.

Farmer of the Year:

Jamie Hicks, Hicks IV
Kennett Square, PA

The Chester County Commissioners and Chester County Ag Council presented the 2022 Chester County Farmer of the Year award to Jamie Hicks, owner-operator of Hicks IV, a crop farming business named in honor of his four young sons. Hicks and his team run the largest crop operation in the county through leasing land from over 100 different landowners. Clients range from equestrians with a few horses to high-profile organizations including Longwood Gardens, Natural Lands, Brandywine Red Clay Alliance, and Winterthur.

“It is a joy to recognize the hard work of farmers in our community,” says Commissioners’ Chair Marian Moskowitz. “Agriculture is vitally important to Chester County, and this is an opportunity to highlight Jamie Hicks, one of the leaders of that industry.”

Hicks is widely regarded in the agriculture community for his entrepreneurial drive, sustainable farming practices, and innovative partnerships. This includes participating in cover-cropping studies with Stroud Water Research scientists. Cover cropping is a practice where plants are grown to cover the soil and may be incorporated into the soil later for enrichment. It has been shown to build organic matter in the soil and decrease water and fertilizer run off.

“The more we can retain and build healthier soil, the better our crops will be when we harvest them in the fall,” Hicks explains.

“Jamie Hicks is a leader in Chester County’s agriculture industry in every sense,” says Commissioner Josh Maxwell. “His business is a great example of how successful farming and environmental stewardship go hand-in-hand.”

“The more we can retain and build healthier soil, the better our crops will be when we harvest them in the fall”

FUTURE OF FARMING

Hicks sees great promise in farmers driving agribusiness, the cross-section of agriculture and business – from production and processing to distribution. He believes the way forward is with new markets and product opportunities, such as Pennsylvania’s emerging hemp industry, and partnering with nontraditional customers like online retailers interested in environmentally friendly packaging materials.

According to Hicks, Chester County is a good place to farm because of its easy access to ports and large consumer markets, including New York, Philadelphia, and Washington. This makes it easier for Hicks and his fellow farmers to get their products to customers up and down the Eastern Seaboard. Hicks also notes that farming in Chester County means he is close to the mushroom industry that supplies fertilizer for his fields as well as serving as a big market for Hicks IV hay and straw.

When he isn’t busy in the fields or in his office, he enjoys participating in local events and fundraisers. Being active in the community has given him a way to talk about the industry he is so passionate about with residents far and near.

Thinking about the next generation of farmers, Hicks recommends they look at least ten years into the future and anticipate how agricultural products can best serve emerging business trends. He encourages farmers to never miss an opportunity and know that customers will move on quickly if their needs aren’t met. He acknowledges that farming can be a rewarding career, but it is not for the faint of heart.

“We all do it for the love of farming, but there are definitely easier ways to make money,” he laughs.

Every year the Chester County Board of Commissioners and the Chester County Ag Council recognize a farmer, farm family, or partnership who maintains and exemplifies outstanding farming practices.

Avon Grove Charter School's Micro-Farm:

A Small Farm with a Big Impact

The high school forensic students working in Avon Grove Charter School (AGCS)'s Micro-Farm have a problem on their hands. They have been asked to determine why there are more feathers than usual around the chicken coop, yet no birds appear to have been harmed. It's all a part of a larger case they are investigating for their forensics class with the birds' molting serving as a clue.

Micro-Farm manager and agriculture teacher Krista Lauterwald encourages students to look for clues around the school's poultry hutch and ask her questions. Afterwards, the teens excitedly compare notes and then head inside to present their conclusions to the rest of their class.

"Our students learn in both indoor and outdoor classrooms here," says Lauterwald of the more than 1,200 students in grades 4-12 who regularly engage with the school's self-dubbed "micro-farm" housed on its 23-acre campus.

FARMYARD MEETS CLASSROOM

The AGCS Micro-Farm Project grew out of the AGCS Green Initiative launched in 2003 to connect students with the natural world through project-based, discovery-oriented learning. As Lauterwald says, "You can't appreciate our food system if you aren't aware of our food system."

Thanks to a series of grants, private donors, and community support, the farm now includes eight sheep, one goat, two alpacas, five ducks, three chickens, and four rabbits. Fleece from the livestock gets used in the high school fiber arts program. During the pandemic when the school was closed, Lauterwald was fortunate to be onsite to film and share the birth of a lamb the students later named "Hope."

The "Bee Academy" is another popular feature. Students can participate in an after-school program to learn about beekeeping on the farm's three hives and harvest honey for the annual tasting event and honey sale.

Middle School Principal GeriAnn Lambert loves seeing how students respond to the Micro-Farm: “It’s really fun to see otherwise shy students shine when they talk about the animals.” Citing the school’s diverse student body which draws from the Avon Grove, Oxford, Coatesville, Kennett, Octorara, and Unionville regions, she says many students may live near farms, but the school may give them their first hands-on experience with farming.

Produce from the substantial garden, raised beds, and greenhouse is used in the cafeteria and surplus is donated to the Chester County Food Bank. During the coldest months of the year, the farm’s greenhouse allows Lauterwald to teach students about hydroponic and aquaponic garden systems.

Recent class projects have included everything from painting the systems of the body on a goat, to experimenting with the growth rate of tomato and radish seeds, and even carving the periodic table of elements into pumpkins.

LITTLE LEARNERS WELCOME

Lauterwald is excited to share that recent Farm to School grants have enabled AGCS to bus its 600 students in grades K-3 from the nearby lower school campus to visit the farm. Those same students are eligible to attend the AGCS Fun on the Farm summer camp program where they learn how to care for the animals and prepare snacks from the garden.

Lauterwald believes food is a great way to connect students of all ages with farming: “I always tell students that if you are interested in food, you should be interested in agriculture.”

Lewis Barnard, the 4th generation owner of his family's nearly 300-year-old farm, thinks about the past a lot as he walks his Kennett Square farm greeting old and new customers. Barnard's Orchard, known for its rows of pick-your-own apple trees, greenhouses full of freesias and snapdragons, and welcoming on-farm store, is a beloved institution in southern Chester County.

Honoring the past was especially important to him and his extended family in 2017 when they needed to settle his uncle's estate, a situation which had immediate financial implications for the business.

CHOOSING PRESERVATION

"I respect the sacrifices of older generations," says Barnard, who lives in the white farmhouse built from logs that were floated down the Susquehanna River and milled onsite. "There are still initials carved into the posts in our greenhouses from employees who kept the business alive through the Great Depression. We wanted to preserve this farm in honor of all the people who made difficult decisions and worked through tough times to bring us to where we are today."

Working with The Land Conservancy for Southern Chester County (now a part of Brandywine Red Clay Alliance), the Chester County Challenge Grant Program, Chester County's Agricultural Land Preservation Program, and the Marmot Foundation, the Barnard family was able to preserve the property for agricultural use in perpetuity and work through the details of the estate.

Barnard is deeply touched that the surrounding community also rallied together to help raise additional funds through pop-up food events and old-fashioned fundraising to help pay for the remaining costs of preservation to ensure the farm's future. Many of those who contributed are customers who bring their families to visit the farm year after year.

"Every season I have at least one person come up to me to shake my hand and say that they've been bringing their family here for over 30 years and thank me for making it possible," says Barnard. "I farm for them as much as I farm for me."

EYE TO THE FUTURE

In addition to preserving the land, Barnard and his staff keep an eye on changing customer tastes to keep the business thriving. He grows plenty of perennial favorites like Stayman Winesap, Fuji, and Honey Crisp apples and is always on the lookout for new varieties, too. Today's apple eater values a crisp texture more than earlier generations, he says. He has also recently added berry bushes and field grown zinnias which have proven to be big hits.

Many customers say it's the farm's character and warm welcome that bring them back year after year. Says longtime Barnard's fan Lindsay Shroepfer of Exton, Pa.: "We love going to Barnard's Orchard because it feels like a hidden gem. It's never overly crowded, and we love its simplicity and charm."

"I like to keep it looking and feeling like a farm, and it turns out several members of the public like it that way, too," says Barnard.

In the end, the farm's success story is greater than Lewis Barnard's business acumen and tenacity alone. It's even greater than all the efforts of Barnard family ancestors who stewarded the land, its history, and abundant resources through the years.

"This farm has always been about all the people who have made this farm possible. The generations before me, the community that has supported us, all the people who have worked here. Everyone has been a part of it," says Barnard.

The Baily Family Wins Duncan Allison Distinguished Service to Agriculture Award

The Chester County Commissioners and Chester County Ag Council presented this year's Duncan Allison Award for Distinguished Service to Agriculture to the Baily family of Baily's Dairy of Pocopson Meadow Farm in West Chester. Three generations of the family are involved, including patriarch Bernard Baily; daughter Becky Baily and her husband Eric Cockcroft; daughter Meredith Parsons and her son Tyler Parsons.

The family is recognized for positively promoting local agriculture and serving as community ambassadors on the industry's behalf. They also host the Chester Valley Dairy 4-H club and lease cows to members who wouldn't otherwise be able to participate.

Commissioner Michelle Kichline said, "The Baily family is an example of farmers who want to share the experience of living and working on a farm with others across Chester County. They are commended for their devotion to teaching youth about raising farm animals and letting children see a cow up-close, sometimes for the first time."

Meredith Parsons, who oversees school field trips to the farm, says she especially loves working with the younger children. "They are amazed to see how big a cow really is," she laughs.

Farmers Markets

Farmers markets are often open-air venues at which farmers and producers offer their products. For the purpose of this guide, farmers markets are generally “producer only markets,” meaning they sell what they produce, not items they purchase from other suppliers.

❄ Markets denoted with a snowflake host winter markets at least once a month during the off-season.

📘 Listings with the Facebook logo have a Facebook page at the time of publication.

SNAP: Markets with this designation accept Supplemental Nutrition Assistance Program (SNAP) benefits as payment for food purchases. Visit www.benefits.gov for more information.

CSA Community Supported Agriculture

Community Supported Agriculture (CSA) is a partnership between the farmer and the members of that CSA. Members pay upfront for the products they will receive during the growing season. This upfront investment helps the farmer have capital for seeds and supplies and helps the farmer plan how much produce to grow. The farmer and the members share in the bounty and/or risk of the harvest.
